17		RULING
18
19	1	Although there is apparently no appeal in this matter, I have been asked for my reasons for the order
20		which I made in April, 2013 because, it is said, they may be of general interest. The matter concerned
21		the terms and conditions which the court may impose in respect of the restoration of a company to the
22		register of companies on the application of a creditor who also seeks a winding up order upon such
23		restoration.
24	2	Grencorp Ltd, a Cayman Islands exempted company ("the Company"), was struck off the register of
25		companies ("the register") by the Registrar of Companies ("the Registrar") on 29th October 2010.
26		Biodiesel (L) Limited ("the Petitioner"), a Malaysian company, applied by petition dated 22 nd March
27		2013 for the restoration of the Company to the register and thereafter for its winding up. The
28		Petitioner claimed to be a creditor of the Company in the sum of at least US$2,859,348.64 and
29		possibly as much as US$6.512m.
30	3	On hearing the petition I ordered that the Company should be restored to the register on payment by
31		the Petitioner of the re-instatement fee equivalent to the original incorporation or registration fee and
32		on condition that the Petitioner also paid the arrears of annual return fees and penalties as specified

by the Registrar. I also made a winding up order in respect of the Company to take effect upon its 1 2 restoration to the register. As well as counsel for the Petitioner, the Solicitor General appeared at the hearing on behalf of the 3 4 Registrar. The issue in contention was whether the court may or should order such restoration to the 4 register to be on the condition of payment by the petitioning creditor of the arrears of annual fees and 5 penalties and, if so, whether it was appropriate for the court to do so in this case. 6 Section 156 of the Companies Law (2012 Revision) ("the Law") provides: 7 5 "(1) Where the Registrar has reasonable cause to believe that a company is not carrying on business 8 or is not in operation, he may strike the company off the register and the company shall thereupon be 9 dissolved 10 11 12 Section 159 Of the Law provides: 6 "If a company or any member or creditor thereof feels aggrieved by the company having been struck 13 off the register in accordance with this Law, the Court on the application of such company, member or 14 creditor made within two years or such longer period not exceeding ten years as the Governor in 15 Cabinet may allow, of the date on which the company was so struck off, may, if satisfied that the 16 company was, at the time of the striking off thereof, carrying on business or in operation, or otherwise 17 that it is just that the company be restored to the register, order the name of the company to be 18 restored to the register, on payment by the company of a re-instatement fee equivalent to the original 19 incorporation or registration fee and on such terms and conditions as to the Court may seem just, and 20 thereupon the company shall be deemed to have continued in existence as if its name had not been 21 struck off; and the Court may, by the same or any subsequent order, give such directions and make 22 such provisions as [may] seem just for placing the company and all other persons in the same position 23 as nearly as may be as if the name of the company had not been struck off'. [My emphasis]. 24 25 Sections 168, 169 and 170 of the Law provide: 26 6 " 168. In January of each year after the year of its registration each exempted company shall 27 furnish to the Registrar a return which shall be in the form of a declaration 28 29 " 169 (1) Every exempted company shall, in January of each year after the year of its 30 registration pay to the revenues of the Islands the annual fee specified in Part 4 of Schedule 31 5 [which sets out a range of fees depending upon the amount of the company's capital] 32 (2) Each such annual fee referred to in subsection (1) shall be tendered with the return 33 required by section 168 34

1 (3) An exempted company who defaults in submitting its annual return under 2 168 or the fee specified in subsection (1) shall incur a penalty 3 4 [And there are then set out a range of penalties up to 100% of the annual fee]. 5 170 Any exempted company which fails to comply with section 168 or 169 shall be deemed 6 a defunct company and shall thereupon be dealt with as such under Part VI [which includes 7 section 159 set out above] but without prejudice to its being registered again as though it 8 were being registered for the first time." 9 O.102, r. 18 (1) of the Grand Court Rules provides that an application by a creditor to restore 7 a company to the register may be combined with an application for the winding up of the 10 11 company and may be made by petition. This was done in this case. By letter dated 11th February 2013 the Assistant Registrar informed the attorneys for the 12 8 Petitioner that the fees payable in respect of the restoration of the Company to the register 13 14 were a re-instatement fee of $470.00, being an amount equivalent to the original 15 incorporation or registration fee, together with the arrears of annual fees and penalties 16 totalling $5,240.00. This resulted in a total sum payable by the Petitioner of $5,710.00. In 17 their letter in response the Petitioner's attorneys accepted the obligation pursuant to section 18 159 of the Law to pay the re-instatement fee equivalent to the original incorporation or 19 registration fee of $470.00 but contended that the Section 159 of the Law did not require the 20 Petitioner, as a creditor of the Company, to pay its outstanding annual fees and penalties as 21 a condition of the restoration of the Company to the register. 22 9 Section 159 of the Law, clearly requires payment by a company of a re-instatement fee 23 equivalent to the original incorporation or registration fee as a condition of the restoration of 24 the company to the register. The Petitioner's attorneys accepted that in their letter to the Assistant Registrar referred to above and also at the hearing before me and there was no 25 26 issue about that. 27 10 Counsel for the Petitioner also accepted that, although Section 159 refers to such re-28 instatement fee as being payable by the company, the fee was in fact payable by the 29 Petitioner, whether or not it is a creditor. He sought to distinguish the position with regard to 30 payment of arrears of annual fees and penalties on the ground that the section makes no 31 reference to them. However, given that they are, of course, equally payable by the Company 32 pursuant to the Law, I was not entirely clear why, if the re-instatement fee is in fact payable 33 by the Petitioner, as was accepted, it was not appropriate or just to require the arrears of 34 annual fees and penalties also to be paid by the Petitioner. 35 It was submitted on behalf of the Petitioner that since Section 159 only specifies payment of 11 36 the re-instatement fee as a condition of restoration to the register, where the company is 37 insolvent the Registrar should rank as a creditor of the Company in respect of the arrears of 38 annual fees and penalties. It was pointed out that, pursuant to Section 141 and Schedule 2. 39 Category 3 of the Law, on insolvency the Company's liability for the arrears of annual fees and penalties would rank as a preferred debt payable in priority to other debts (albeit ranking equally with the other preferred debts described in Schedule 2: see Section 141 (2) (a) and (b)).

Counsel for the Petitioner also drew attention to the fact that the Companies Law of 1964 (Cap. 22) made no reference to a requirement for the payment of a re-instatement fee equivalent to the original incorporation or registration fee as a condition for restoration of a company to the register but simply provided for such restoration to the register to be on such terms and conditions as to the court may seem just (see Section 175 of the 1964 Law). That wording is, of course, also replicated in the present Law. Counsel was unable to say precisely when the specific requirement for payment of the re-instatement fee first appeared in the Companies Law but it was there by the time of the 2003 Revision. It was argued that this demonstrated that sometime between 1964 and 2003 the Legislature had decided to cap the fee payable for restoration of a company to the register at an amount equivalent to the original incorporation or registration fee.

- It seemed to me that the consequence of this argument, namely that Section 159 should be interpreted as creating a cap on what is payable by an applicant for restoration of a company to the register, would be to put a fetter on the general provision in the Law which follows the reference to payment of a re-instatement fee, namely that the court may order the restoration "on such terms and conditions as to the Court may seem just". It was my view that the provision clearly creates a general discretion on the part of the court to impose whatever terms and conditions it considers just on an order for restoration to the register. The provision is expressed as an addition to the requirement to pay the re-instatement fee and, in my view, clearly gave the court a wide discretion to impose such further terms and conditions as it considers just. In my opinion the specific requirement for payment of a re-instatement fee does not restrict or limit this general discretion. It does not impose a cap on what further or other payments the court may consider it just to require to be paid. If one of the terms and conditions which the court considers to be just is to require an applicant for restoration to pay the arrears of annual fees of the relevant company, for example, there is nothing in the provisions of Section 159 of the Law which, in my judgment, prevents the court from so ordering.
- The terms of Section 159 apply equally to an application for restoration of a company to the register by a shareholder but it has never, to my knowledge, been previously submitted, still less held, that it is not open to the court to order that such an applicant should also pay arrears of annual fees because there is a cap on what the court may order as a result of the express provision mandating payment of a re-instatement fee. In fact it has been standard practice for many years to require such an applicant to pay the arrears of annual fees and penalties due by the company concerned as specified by the Registrar. I therefore considered that the court had jurisdiction to require an applicant for restoration of a company to the register, whether or not a creditor, to pay such other sum due by the company as specified by the Registrar as a term or condition of the restoration to the register as it considered just
- In light of my opinion above I turned to consider whether it was just that the Petitioner should be required to pay the Company's arrears of annual fees and the penalties due as a condition of restoration of the Company to the register. In this regard, I noted that section 159 of the Law provides that upon restoration to the register a company is deemed to have continued in existence as if it had not been struck off. Furthermore the court is expressly empowered to make such provisions as seem just to place the company in the same position as if it had not been struck off. In light of these provisions it seemed to me to be wrong in principle to compel the Registrar to restore a company to the register which was not in good standing at the time of restoration. In my view it was appropriate and desirable that the company should be placed in that position by terms and conditions imposed by the court pursuant to its general discretion explained above. I did not consider that the fact that the applicant for restoration was a creditor or that the company was to be put into winding up after its restoration detracted from this. The Company was struck off by the Registrar inter alia for non-payment of its annual fees and consequent penalties and it did not seem right to me to order the restoration of the Company to the register while the same defaults, the very reasons why it was struck off, persisted. To my mind for the court to require restoration of a company to the register while the annual fees and consequential penalties remained outstanding would defeat the very intent of Sections 156 and 170 of the Law.

The submission by counsel for the Petitioner that the Registrar should simply rank as a creditor in the liquidation of the Company in respect of the arrears of annual fees and penalties did not address my opinion expressed above that in principle the Registrar should not be compelled to restore to the register a company which has not in or been placed in good standing at the time of such restoration. The restoration of company to the register must obviously take place before any winding up of the company can take effect.

- Furthermore, I saw no reason why the payment of arrears of annual fees and penalties should await the unknown outcome of a company's winding up. In this case there was no evidence before me of the likely ability of the Company to pay the arrears of annual fees and penalties and I would not have expected there usually to be such evidence available on such an application. The only evidence was as to the Company's substantial indebtedness to the Petitioner. Also, if the Registrar was required to rank as a creditor in respect of the arrears of fees and penalties there would inevitably be significant delay in recovering the debt as well as cost to the Registrar in such a course. In addition, any benefit from ranking as a preferred creditor, in the absence of any information at all about other possible preferred creditors of the Company or about the Company's assets, would also be entirely uncertain. I did not consider that to order the restoration of the Company to the register and require Registrar to have to rank as a creditor for the arrears of annual fees and penalties was at all appropriate.
- Counsel for the Registrar referred me to two authorities. The Irish case of *Re Haltone (Cork)*Limited etc [1996] 1 IR 32 concerned an application by a creditor for restoration of the debtor company to the register of companies. The applicant creditor had a judgment which it wished to enforce against the company and its officers. The relevant provision of the Irish Companies Act was very similar to the Law in providing that on restoration to the register the company would be deemed to have continued in existence as if it had not been struck off and in providing also that the court might by an order for restoration of the company to the register give such directions and make such provisions as seemed just for placing the company in the same position as if it had not been struck off. In the Irish High court O'Hanlon J. on ordering the restoration of the company to the register directed that the applicant creditor should be responsible for all fees payable to the registrar of companies in respect of the restoration.
- A similar provision in the English Companies Act 1948 was considered by Megarry J (as he then was) in Re Test Holdings (Clifton) Ltd [1970] Ch 285. The issue was whether the applicant creditor seeking restoration of the company to the register should be liable for the legal costs of the registrar of companies. Megarry J said:

"He who seeks the revival of a defunct company must face the prospect of bearing the costs of whatever has to be done to ensure that restoration is properly effected"

Although the circumstances were somewhat different in that it was payment of the registrar's legal fees by the applicant creditor that was in issue, the general statement seemed to me to be of equal applicability with respect to payment of statutory fees and penalties due by the company concerned. It was my view that in order for restoration of the Company in this case be properly effected the Company would have to be in good standing and not in default of its obligations as a registered company.

20. In light of all my views as set out above I concluded that the Company should be restored to the register on payment by the Petitioner of the re-instatement fee of $470.00 and that it was just that such restoration be on the term and condition the Petitioner should also pay the arrears of annual fees and penalties totaling $5,240.00. I therefore so ordered.
